ICT Overview

Information and Communication Technology (ICT) is at the heart of the UK economy and is a key source of competitiveness for every sector of industry, opening up new markets, increasing performance, cutting delivery times and driving productivity. According to e-Skills UK, the IT sector makes a significant and growing contribution to the UK economy, representing almost 5% of total UK Gross Value Added (GVA).

The ICT cluster covers computer and related activities, telecommunications, ICT manufacturing and supply, internet service providers, systems integrators, software developers, IT hardware suppliers, mobile phone retailers, network specialists, website developers, consultants, computer recycling companies as well as a wide range of complementary services; such as parts suppliers and educational institutions.

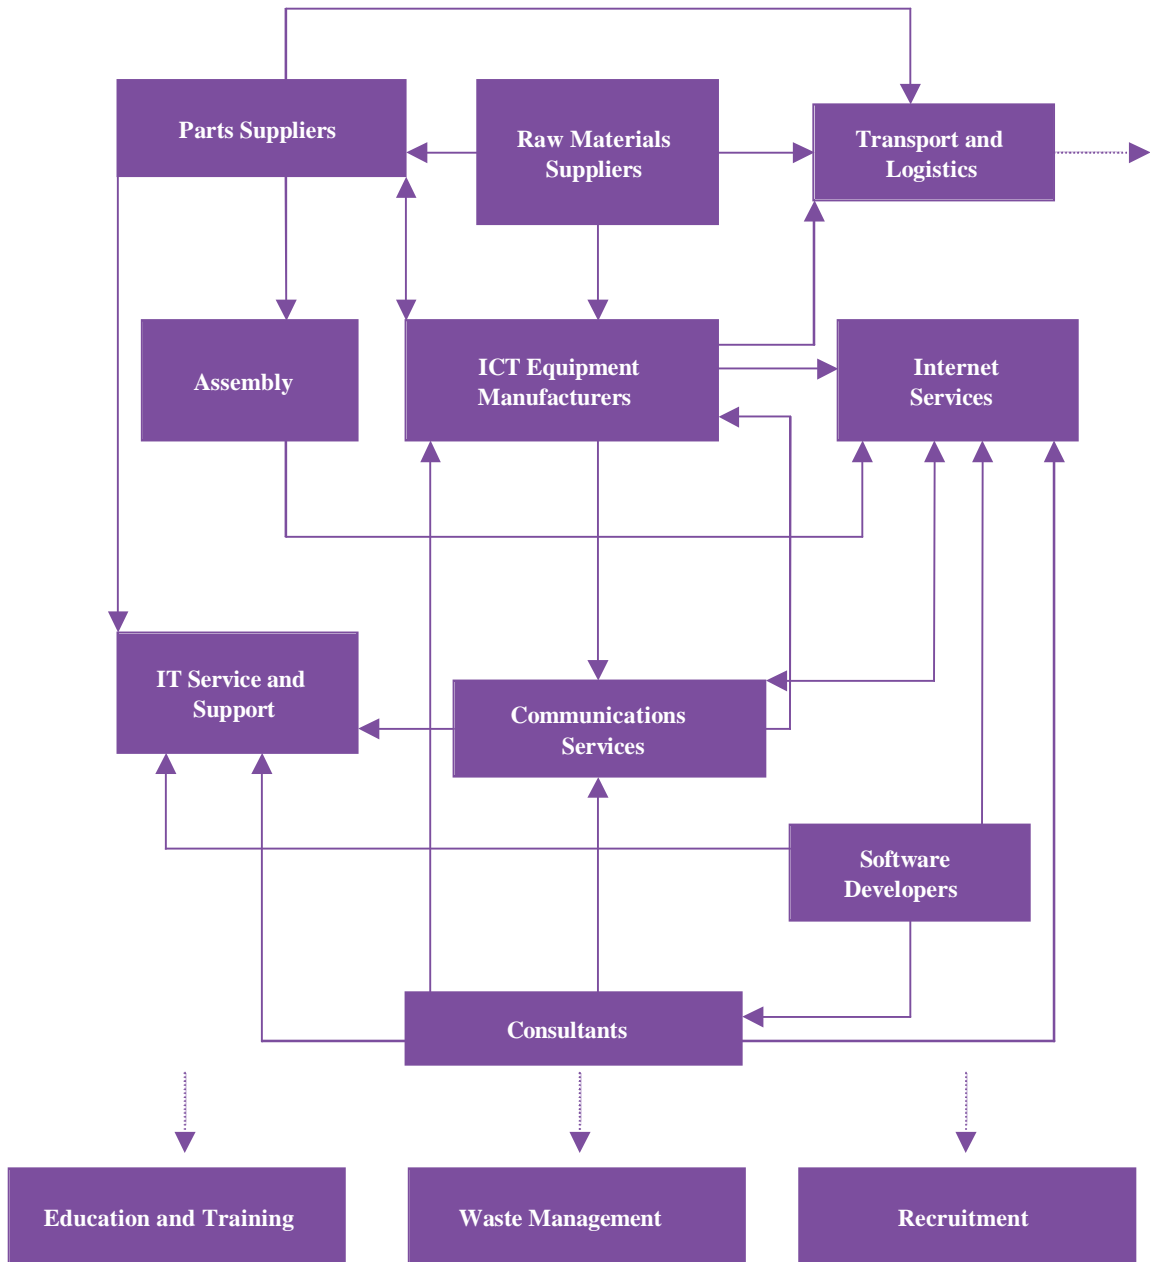

The East of England ranks third amongst the nine English regions in terms of size of its ICT workforce. The East of England Development Agency (EEDA) estimates that there are over 1,600 ICT companies operating in Bedfordshire, employing over 17,000 people - 44% in manufacturing, 36% in the service sector, 14% in Consultancy, 5% in retail and 1% in Research and Development.

Luton has an emerging ICT cluster, providing employment for 7% of its people, and encompassing 9% of all businesses in the area. Within the Luton City Growth area, there are 336 ICT related businesses employing 3,092 people. The number of businesses is increasing by 9.5% per year, whilst the number of employees is increasing by 1.9%.

These statistics support the view that there is vast potential for rapid growth and expansion and e-Skills envisage that the ICT industry will continue to benefit from an on-going demand in particular for technical skills in system integration, networking, web design, security and IT architecture.
